

Pet Chaplain in the News

Monday, 19 November 2007

Last Updated Thursday, 29 October 2009

National Public Radio (NPR) reporter Laura Leslie tells the story of Pet Chaplain and how the idea of veterinary pastoral care got started in Raleigh, North Carolina at The North Carolina State University Veterinary Teaching Hospital. Go WolfPack!

Pet Chaplains by Laura Leslie National Public Radio

How to know when to get another pet by Deborah R. Meyer, The Chapel Hill News "Mom, I've never lived without a pig." This statement of fact and sorrow from my 4-year old daughter, Beckett, added even more weight to my grief. It was April 28 and our beloved 600-pound farm pig, Charlotte, whom we had adopted eight years earlier, had just died. We were pigless. We were Charlotteless

How to know when to get another pet

Respecting the owner-pet bond NCSU seeks to innovate with veterinary chaplain by Yonat Shimron, Staff Writer, News and Observer Respecting the owner-pet bond Pets Gaining Recognition in Places of Worship by Maryann Mott, National Geographic News Pets Gaining Recognition in Places of Worship Providing Support for Pet Owners by Christine Copper, Technician Providing Support for Pet Owners Chaplains offer comfort to pet owners by Nicole Larosa, Religion News Service Chaplains offer comfort to pet owners

Pet Chaplain by Christine Rogers, North Carolina Now, UNC Public Television The Pet Chaplain video program

The Pet Chaplain by Thomas Bartlett, Chronicle of Higher Education Rob Gierka, a doctoral student, is head of publications in the information-technology division of North Carolina State University. But his real calling is as the Pet Chaplain.

Chaplain Duty Best Friends Network Chaplain Duty

New Ways to Commemorate Pets By Maryann Mott for PetSide.com New Ways to Commemorate Pets